[redacted] In response to his inquiry as to whether the Soviets had small nuclear weapons and had deployed them outside the Soviet Union, I advised George Murphy, Joint Committee on Atomic Energy staff, that the Soviets did have these weapons but that thus far they had not been deployed outside the borders of the Soviet Union. Murphy seemed to think that in view of this easy answer to his question, it would not be necessary to arrange for a staff briefing on this. However he is to discuss it with the Chairman and let us know if anything further is desired.
